

Dreier's Wife Off the Hook

By Bruce Golding

March 4, 2010

Crooked lawyer Marc Dreier's ex-wife is off the hook for an unpaid loan the fraudster took out more than a decade ago.

Saleh Holdings sued Elisa Dreier in Manhattan Bankruptcy Court last year as an alleged guarantor for the bad debt after her ex-hubby stopped making payments following his 2008 arrest in a $400 million Ponzi scheme.

But the company -- which only got back $55,000 of the $550,000 note -- dropped its claim after a judge ruled that a six-year statute of limitations had expired.

Lawyer Richard Roth said Elisa Dreier was completely unaware of the loan until she got slapped with the suit, and that "it's a mystery as to who signed her name" to the papers.
