

A $LAP SHOT AT ALT

I know what he said and I know how he said it... Fifty-year-old women are hot, too. But if he's partial to me, boy? That's fantastic," said Lori. "That's wonderful. She's 50 and that's fantastic."

I tell her Alt's not 50 yet. (She's 47).

shirthing incident. She's a hard-charging career woman, mother of five, ages 3 to 12. A former New Yorker, she lives with Ron in Florida, where she's starting a magazine, Yola — "to promote designers and women in business" — and raising her brood.

Just talking to her is exhilarating.

But while Alt, who's never had kids, keeps her feet on the ground, Lori has secret fantasies — she wants to run after you have to run after a bond workout."

Alt sued Ron Greschner for a share of a $210,000 investment made during their marriage, which ballooned to $38 million. But the judge ruled against her, saying too much time had passed, and Alt had neglected her interests.

"I don't know why she [sued], said Lori. "Why does anyone do anything? My husband wanted to die."

Andrea Preyser is a 40-year-old woman who is not too hot, but I'm his wife and he's partial to me." But with Alt's nude Playboy spread set to hit the stands, Lori seemed to disagree as she faintly gazed at the woman.

"She seems to be in 1950s."

Judge shuts her out of the money

Supernovella Carol Alt's lawsuit against her ex-hubby, former Ranger captain, Ron Greschner, was led yesterday by a federal judge who blasted her and everyone else involved in the long-simmering contract case.

The judge, however, was not specifically upset afterword, reportedly stating that she gave her long-expected "closure on one of the most significant periods of my life."

"It was a heavy load, but I feel vindicated and I feel free, and these are tears of joy," the former Sports Illustrated swimmer cover girl said outside Manhattan federal court.

The 47-year-old beauty also hugged her attorney, appearing in a December issue of Playboy, saying it celebrated her victory over cancer through a "raw food" diet.

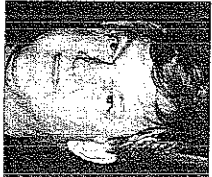

"I'm so grateful for the gift of life," she said, her voice choking with emotion. Greschner, 53, declined to answer questions after the verdict, saying "nothing good ever comes of that."

On Tuesday, the former Brooklynite's ex-wife's representatives showed all appear, telling the Post "I have no interest in seeing her."

My wife right now is 40 and hot after five kids." But the former lovebirds — who faced off over her claim that he cheated her out of investment profits from their 18-year-marriage — had a brief reconciliation in the courtroom, well after Alt approached from the losing side.

she expressed sympathy over Greschner's mother's recent surgery. Last year for half of what she estimated was $18 million in profits the former defense man made from a 1997 stock deal involving his brother-in-law's Canadian water-filtration company.

But in a decision that took

RON GRESCHNER He scores!

40 minutes to read aloud, federal Judge Colleen McMahon said New York's six-year statute of limitations for contract cases meant Alt waited too long to file her lawsuit.

And the judge said her analysis of the evidence showed Alt would only have been entitled to about $164,000 if she had sued on time.

McMahon laced into the attorneys on both sides, saying they intentionally dragged out the case for more than a year after she told them to be ready for trial in 20 days.

McMahon said she would punish the Harvey mistresses for "allowing only a fraction of the time Alt was allowed to pay Greschner's attorneys."

The judge also had harsh words for Alt and Greschner themselves. She said Greschner was "technically quite wrong" when he told Alt he wouldn't know how much the stock deal was worth until he sold out, and she said parts of Alt's testimony ranged from "somewhat if not entirely hard to believe" to "outrageous."

The judge also repeatedly faulted her attorneys for protecting her own future, especially by not hiring her own lawyer when the couple agreed to separate.

But Alt said she wouldn't do anything differently if she had the chance. "Call me stupid. Call me a dumb brunette. Instead of a blonde," she said.
